A protein having insecticidal activity, a DNA encoding said protein, and an agent and a method for preventing harmful organisms.

Claim 1; Page 9-12; 19pp; Japanese.

This invention relates to a crystalline protein comprising a fully defined sequence and the mucleotide sequence encoding this protein. The protein of the invention is an agent for preventing barmful organisms comprising Bacillus thuringlensis servova galleriae SDS502, its mutant or a microbe transformed by a DNA encoding the protein. This microbe can be used to produce a protein containing the protein, or containing a protein having insecticidal activity produced by the SDS502, its mutant or a transformed microbe, a microbe which is transformed by using the above or a seed transformed by using the above DNA, and pacific or a seed transformed by using the above DNA, and Bacillus thuringiensis servorar galleriae SDS502 producing a protein comprising and producing a protein showing insecticidal activity. The protein of the invention may have insecticidal activity. The agent is used for preventing Coleoptera larvee. This sequence represents the Bacillus thuringiensis insecticide protein of the invention

The toxin is a deltar-endotoxin active against acarid pests, including the Two Spotted Spider mite. The isolates can be used against non-phytophagus mites such as acarid pests of livestock, fowl and stored prods. The genes can be cloned and used to transform other hosts, which can be used to control mites, or in the case of transgenic plants, be resistant to mites. The sequence given is an approx. 130 kD protien known as Bacillus thuringiensis PS50C (B.t.PS50C). This novel delta-endotoxin has been shown to be active against the Colorado potato beetle (Leptinotarsa decemlineata). The gene encoding this toxin can be transformed into suitable hosts such as Pseudomonas, which can then be applied to the environment of coloropteran insects where they will proliferate and be ingested by the insects. This DNA sequence can be inserted into an expression vector which contains a promoter/operator region, a ribosome binding site, polyadenylation signals, etc. This will allow transcription and translation of the cells in the appropriate host. The sequences given in AAR33768-70 represent lepidopteran-active toxins. The DNA encoding these sequences were used within a Ti or Ri plasmid, to transform plant cells. Whole plants can then be regenerated from the transformed cells. The toxin may also be produced by cloning Bacillus thuringiensis (Bt) . It may then be applied directly to the plant locus. The DNA encoding this sequence was isolated from the Bacillus
The DNA encoding this sequence was isolated from the Bacillus
The DNA encoding this sequence was isolated from the Bacillus Thuringiensis strain knumanotensis. Insects in the family Scarabacidae constitute a serious pest control problem, especially when destructive larval stage insects infest high value turf found in golf courses, playing fields and lawns. The larvae of many species also attack grains, tuberous crops, and ornamentals. The larvae are known as white grubs, or chafer grubs, and can be found in Geraying organic matter, or in the soil where they consume plant roots. In Burope and the U.S. populations of these larvae and adults have developed resistance to chemical insecticides such as the organochlorines and DDT. These toxin sequences, and intext cells that are capable of expressing these proteins, can be used to control many pests of the family scarabacides, such as species of cyclocophala, and Popillia. The toxins are active against larvae (present in soil) and against adults. (Updated on 16-OCT-2003 to standardise OS

The toxin is a delta-endotoxin which has a mol. wt. of ca. 130 kD. It is useful for control of coleoptera larvae e.g. it is effective against Anomala cuprea but has little effect on Lepidoptera. The toxin can be used as B.t. spores or crystals, as opt. tratacted cells (B.t. or transformed microorganisms) or it is expressed by plants. (Updated on 25-MAR-2003 to correct PN field.) The invention is useful for impacting an insect pest by applying the the molecules of the invention to the environment of the insect pest by spraying, dusting, broadcasting, or seed coating, where the insect pest is selected from Colorado potato beetle, western corn rootworm or southern corn rootworm or for invention is also useful for increasing insect target range and for producing transgenic microorganisms and plants that express the pesticidal polypeptide. The invention is also useful for producing transformed plants and in transforming any organism to produce the pesticidal polypeptide of the invention. The present amino acid sequence represents a Bacillus thuringiensis wild-type Cry1218

The invention is useful for impacting an insect pest by applying the the molecules of the invention to the environment of the insect pest by spraying, dusting, broadcasting, or seed coating, where the insect pest is selected from Colorado potato beetle, western corn rootworm or southern corn rootworm. The invention is also useful for increasing insect target range and for producing transgenic microorganisms and plants that express the pesticidal polypeptide. The invention is also useful for producing transformed plants and in transforming any organism to produce the pesticidal polypeptide of the invention. The present amino acid sequence represents a Bacillus thuringiensis wild-type Cry1218 endotoxin protein

The DNA encoding this sequence was isolated from the Bacillus thuringiensis strain kumanchoensis. Insects in the family Scarabaeidae constitute a serious pest control problem, especially when destructive larval stage insects infest high value turf found in golf courses.

I playing fields and lawns. The larvae of many species also attack grains, tuberous crops, and ornamentals. The larvae are known as white grubs, or chafer grubs, and ornamentals. The larvae are known as white grubs, or chafer grubs, and ornamentals. The larvae are known as white grubs or chafer grubs, and ornamentals. The larvae are known as white soil these larvae and adults have developed resistance to chemical insecticides such as the organochlorines and DDT. These toxin sequences, and intact cells that are capable of expressing these proteins, can be used to control many pests of the family scarabaeidae, such as species of cyclocephala, and Popillia. The toxins are active against larvae (present in soil) and against adults. (Updated on 16-OCT-2003 to standardise OS

                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           This is the amino acid sequence of a Cry9C (crystal) mutant protein which is toxic to an insect species. It is modified in the method of the invention in an attempt to improve its toxicity. The improved proteins are useful for producing transgenic plants and seeds in controlling insects feeding on a plant. The transgenic plants are also useful for producing more transgenic plants with similar characteristics, or for introducing the improved cry9C gene (including fragments) into the same plant variety or related plant species. The Cry9C protein can be obtained from cultured cells of the transgenic plants and used in insecticide compositions against lepidopteran insects, especially Ostrinia nubilalis, Heliothis virescens and Diatraea grandiosella. The cry9C gene can be expressed in combination with another insect control protein (e.g. Another B.thuringiensis derived crystal protein, especially CryMb- or Cry1B-type protein), and used to transform B.thuringiensis, which crystales other insecticidal toxins. Such strains are useful against a variety of insect pests, or insects where insect resistance development is prevented or delayed. (Note: this sequence is not given in the insection).

It is modified in the method of the invention in an attempt to improve its toxicity. The improved proteins are useful for producing transgenic plants and seeds in controlling insects feeding on a plant. The transgenic plants are also useful for producing more transgenic plants with similar characteristics, or for introducing the improved cry9C gene (including fragments) into the same plant variety or related plant species. The Cry9C protein can be obtained from cultured cells of the transgenic plants and used in insecticide compositions against lepidopteran insects. especially Ostrinia mubilalis, Heliothis virescens and Distrace grandiosella. The cry9C gene can be expressed in combination with another insect control protein (e.g. Another B. thuringiensis derived crystal protein, especially Cry1Ab or Cry1B-type protein), and used to transform B.thuringiensis, which crystels produces other insecticidal toxins. Such strains are useful against a variety of insect pests, or insects where insect resistance development is specification, but is generated using the information provided by the

This is the amino acid sequence of a Cry9C (crystal) mutant protein which is toxic to an insect species. It is modified in the method of the invention in an attempt to improve its toxicity. The improved proteins are useful for producing transgenic plants and seeds in controlling insects feeding on a plant. The transgenic plants are also useful for producing more transgenic plants with similar characteristics, or for introducing the improved cry9C gene (including fragments) into the same plant variety or related plant species. The Cry9C protein can be obtained from cultured cells of the transgenic plants and used in insecticide compositions against lepidopteran insect control protein (e.g. telliothis virescens and Diatraea grandiosella. The cry9C gene can be expressed in combination with another insect control protein (e.g. Another B. thuringiensis derived crystal protein, especially Cry1Ab- or Cry1B-type protein), and used to transform B. thuringiensis, which crysches other insecticidal toxins. Such strains are useful against a variety of insect pests, or insects where insect resistance development is speciation, but is generated using the information provided by the
